The Lessons Of History - The Price Of Bread Can Bring Revolution

On the morning of October 5, 1789, dozens of women were looking for food at an outdoor market in the Faubourg Saint-Antoine neighborhood of Paris.

But the store shelves were nearly empty. Bread in particular- a staple of the French diet- was in critically short supply. And what little bread the shops did have available was being sold for sky-high prices.

This was nothing new for French peasants; the government had mismanaged the economy so poorly that food supplies had been falling (and bread prices rising) for several years.

There had even been food riots and protests going back more than a decade to the mid 1770s. But the situation only worsened.

People finally reached their breaking point that October morning in 1789, when a single young woman standing in corner of the marketplace began beating a drum, signaling the other women that it was time for another protest.

As they marched through the streets, more and more supporters joined, with some estimates as high as 10,000 people.

Their first stop was City Hall in Paris, located at the Hotel de Ville; there, officials opened grain reserves to feed the protesters. But the mob's anger wasn't quenched.

At this point they didn't just want bread, or even a single meal. They wanted revolution. So from there they set out to Versailles, the King's palace outside of Paris.

It took them about six hours to reach Versailles, where, that evening, King Louis XVI met personally with some of the protest leaders.

He made promises to give them more food, then later announced that he would voluntarily relinquish some of his power and accept a new bill of rights for the French people.

But the crowd still wasn't satisfied.

So around 6am the following morning, the protesters decided to enter the palace. Royal guards barely resisted this insurrection; they shot one protester, and one guard was killed.

But for the most part, people were easily able to access the inside of the palace where they freely wandered the halls as if enjoying a museum tour.

By 1pm the protesters' leadership had found the king and demanded that he accompany them back to Paris. He agreed.

The march back took roughly 9 hours, and it had the feeling of a parade. The crowd (which had grown to 60,000 by that point) was overjoyed, because it was clear that the King was at their mercy. And they were the ones in control.

There are so many similar examples throughout human history, and they all lead to the same conclusion: don't screw up the food supply.

Politicians can get away with an astonishing level of corruption and incompetence, and their citizens will tolerate it. But if enough people struggle to put food on the table for their families, trouble is coming.

Any politician with half a brain understands this lesson. Sadly it's not clear if the people in charge today even have half a brain.

Inflation has been rising for nearly a year. None of the so-called experts saw it coming. Even when inflation was obvious, their approach was to gaslight people and deny it.

Then they told us that inflation was "transitory".

Then when they finally admitted it was a problem, they said they'd consider doing something about it in a few months.

After its two-day meeting this week, officials from the Federal Reserve are expected to announce that they're FINALLY going to take some action to combat inflation... in MARCH.

So just sit tight another month and a half.

Unfortunately, any action the Fed takes at this point is "too little, too late".

Today's inflation is the result of a number of factors- demand, supply, and money.

On the demand side, the federal government literally deposited cash in people's bank accounts, fueling a surge in consumer spending.

Yet on the supply side, they closed businesses, told people to stay home, and compelled companies to fire millions of heretical workers.

The end result is fewer goods and services being produced, at a time when people have more money to spend and the appetite to do so. This is what has caused rising prices.

Yet on top of this mess, the Federal Reserve has been supercharging inflation by shoveling money into the US economy by the trillions.

Now they're promising to reduce their money printing and promise to have a few tiny, symbolic interest rate increases.

Sorry, but this won't really move the needle, especially when it comes to food.

Most people would be surprised at how labor intensive agriculture is. Certainly there are a number of crops (especially grain) that are fully mechanized throughout the entire process- planting, maintenance, harvest, and distribution.

But many key food products require significant manpower at some point in the chain.

Meat, for example, is very labor intensive because of the number of people required to run a pack house operation.

And many staple fruits and vegetables require an army of harvest workers to hand pick the produce.

So now, because of Covid (and the government response to Covid) pack houses in the US are struggling to maintain staff. And finding enough harvest workers in America has become borderline impossible.

There's also a major problem in US agriculture that so many farm costs, from fertilizers to fuel to even packing materials (like cardboard and plastic containers) are soaring. And these costs are all obviously passed on to consumers.

Container ports also continue to be a major bottleneck, as meat, fruit, vegetables imported from overseas are literally rotting off the coast of California.

Increasing interest rates by 0.25% is not going to fix any of these issues. It won't clear the ports, and it won't bring the workers back.

Fortunately it's not 1789 anymore. And even though capitalism is on the ropes, there's enough of it remaining for now to prevent dire food shortages.

Talented people around the world are working very hard to ensure that quality food is being grown and delivered to consumers, despite every obstacle the government puts in their way.

So I'm not suggesting that food riots are imminent.

But rising prices? Absolutely. And that's going to have serious implications for political leadership.

It's interesting that the French Revolution is typically considered to have begun on July 14, 1789; that's the day that revolutionaries stormed the Bastille armory in Paris. And its anniversary remains one of the most important national holidays in France today.

But back in 1789, the response to the storming of the Bastille was fairly tame.

Thomas Jefferson, for example, was coincidentally stationed in Paris in the summer of 1789 and witnessed everything.

He wrote to John Jay on July 19th, just five days after the storming of the Bastille, "Tranquillity is now restored to the Capital: the shops are again opened; the people resuming their labours, and, if the want of bread does not disturb our peace, we may hope a continuance of it."

So even Jefferson, who was incredibly astute, didn't think that the storming of the Bastille was the start of a full blown revolution.

It was only until three months later, when an angry mob had literally taken control of the King, did everyone realize the truth: people want change, and they're not messing around.

And it all started because of the price (and scarcity) of bread.

Behold, A Pale Horse

January 27, 2022

by Bill Perkins

*I looked, and behold, an ashen horse; and he who sat on it had the name Death; and Hades was following with him. Authority was given to them over a fourth of the earth to kill with sword and with famine and with pestilence and by the wild beasts of the earth. Rev. 6:8

Last week we looked at the Black Horse of Revelation 6 and its associated inflation. This week we'll look at the Ashen horse that follows.

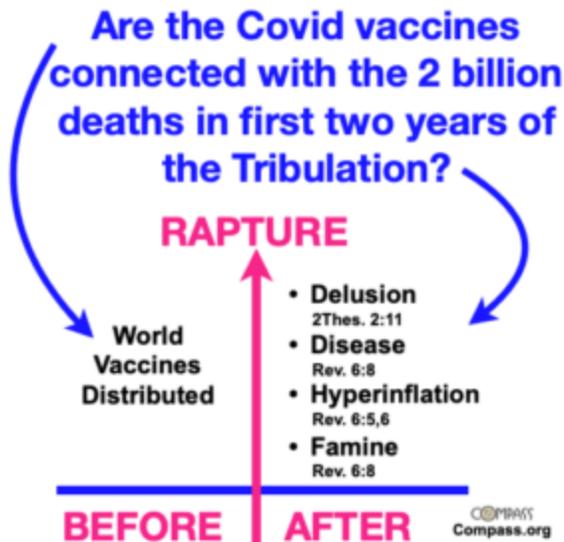

The word "ashen" in the Greek is literally "pale green." It indicates something going from green and fruitful and turning toward yellow and dying.

So, following the New World Leader bursting on the scene post-Rapture in Rev. 6:2, war in Rev. 6:4 ("a great sword" = nuclear bomb?) and the economic collapse with sky-high inflation in Rev. 6:5-6, death and hell naturally follow.

Jesus bestows authority for the 4th rider to begin causing unprecedented death—25% of the earth's population. That's about two billion deaths. Hard to even imagine, but the pallor color makes a lot of sense with that many dying so quickly, and probably from a nuclear bomb.

...their flesh will rot while they stand on their feet, and their eyes will rot in their sockets, and their tongue will rot in their mouth. Zech. 14:12

Four ways are mentioned as to how people die—1) Great sword (nuclear?), causing 2) famine, 3) pestilence and 4) wild beasts. So we're wondering if the coming world famine may be raising its ugly head.

We have continued to ask the question, “Are the vaccines today connected to the (among other things) famines in the Tribulation?”

Could be. If the Rapture is close, it shouldn't surprise us to see a lot of this coming together just like we see the beginnings of inflation and a one-world monetary system.

There seemed to be plenty of food for everyone up until the Biden administration took over in January 2021. It seems every decision they make contributes to more pain. More and more people are asking, “Whose side are you on?”

But if that group of yahoos is a tool of Satan (I just don't think they're working for the Lord) then it makes sense that they are doing everything they can to collapse the United States into submission to the world Globalists/Satanists.

Their ultimate goal is getting to a digital currency that they control. That is the prize, ultimate control. They will ultimately get there according to the Bible, but not until after the Rapture. In the meantime, Christ is freedom and Satan is the opposite...no freedom.

To understand how close we are to losing our current system and beginning a new one controlled by the bad guys, we can look back a couple of years to see the obvious.

We can trace our most current financial situation to the fall of 2019, when the Globalists/Satanists were doing all they could to ruin the USA monetary system. We know this from the actions they took when they lost control of the Fed's borrowing and lending.

Only this time, rather than letting companies fail, the "powers that be" made a calculated decision to prop up the bankrupt companies by allowing more borrowing to cover their losses.

The losses were so huge, tens of trillions of dollars, they couldn't borrow from normal channels so they high-jacked the Federal Reserve to cover their trillion dollar losses.

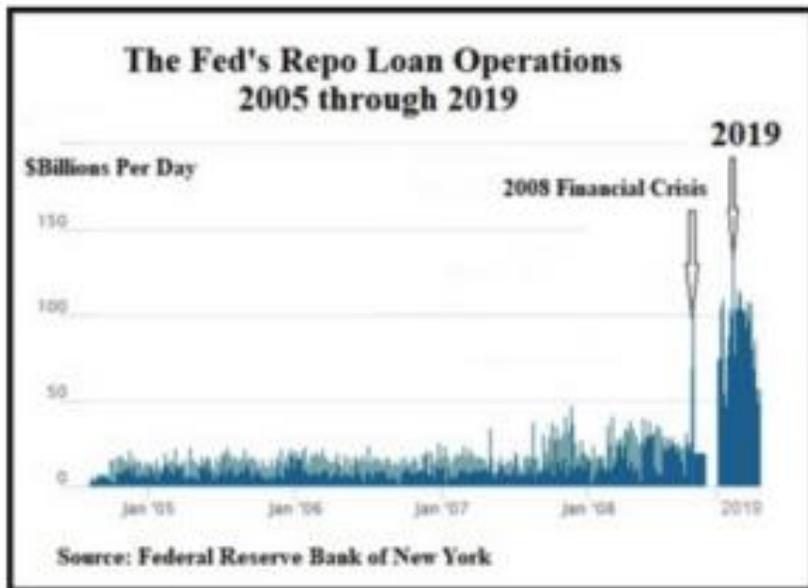

These losses amount to some 20 times higher than the losses in 2008. (See "Fed Repo Loss" chart)

To best understand what happened in 2019, we need to compare it to what happened in 2008. Then, so many investment companies bet on mortgage-backed securities and other high-risk investment derivatives only to see their portfolios fall apart when the housing bubble burst.

But investment companies like Lehman Brothers, Bear Sterns and many banks were allowed to go bankrupt to help reset the system. It was painful, but we got through it.

Yet in the fall of 2019, we were back to the same problems we had in 2008. Banks and investment firms were again betting on high-risk derivatives and they began losing huge amounts of money.

Look at the difference between 2008 and 2019. If 2008 caused a worldwide financial crisis, what was going on in 2019? The answer is that they allowed all those bankrupt companies to borrow massive amounts to cover loses.

All this was done to keep bankrupt companies afloat a little longer so they can keep the illusion that they're making money. Our inflation today is a result of all this excessive borrowing. These companies can't stop borrowing or they'll go broke.

borrowed the most in 2019 were revealed:

- DeutscheBank $1.3 Trillion
- Citigroup $1.43 Trillion
- Barclays $1.48 Trillion
- Goldman Sachs $1.67 Trillion
- JP Morgan $2.59 Trillion
- Nomura Securities $3.7 Trillion

Just last week the six banks who

When, Not If

These are shocking amounts borrowed. And sadly they can stay alive only by continuing to borrow. There's little hope any of these will survive in the long run.

It's just a matter of time until the decision is made to pull the plug and institute a new, for our own good of course, world digital monetary system.

In the meantime, our inflation will only get worse as their borrowing debases our dollar. So they need something to happen (a fake or real war, another virus, collapse of food supply, electrical and/or Internet failure, etc.) to cover their financial changeover.

Russia and China

Communist Russia and China are balking at going along with the newly proposed world monetary system.

China has their own financial system and are successfully using it to build their Belt and Road from China to France (through/next to Israel).(2)

They have their jealous eyes on the Republic of China (Taiwan) (orange on map) to take over and make part of the CCP.

Russia knows the Globalists/Satanists are in control of the U.S. and they want no part of the new world financial system of which they would have no control. Communists want ALL control so they're not about to get in bed with the Globalists. So Russia is being positioned as "the bad guy."

Russia's on the verge of annexing some or all of Ukraine. It probably won't be a "war" because most of the eastern half of Ukraine speaks Russian anyway. It may be only changing out leaders to one who is pro-Kremlin.

Or they may take it over piece by piece, the first piece being the eastern Ukraine who has the most Russian-speaking people. When the dust settles, they'll slowly take over the rest of Ukraine, piece by piece.

Ukraine's adjoining neighbor to the south, Crimea, used to be part of the USSR. Along with Ukraine, it gained independence in 1991 when the USSR fell apart. Russia took back Crimea in 2014 and nobody cared.

According to UNICEF, 10 million Ukrainians are either starving or severely malnourished. So a lot of hungry people would be happy for someone else to run things for a while.(3)

But the Globalists/Satanists will probably call this an invasion and/or war. They need the distraction to cover for a new digital dollar and/or food shortages due to the ridiculous Covid restraints laid down by Brandon. Ports are jammed, borders are restricted to va((inated truck drivers, etc.

These food shortages will continue to show up in our stores. Currently we are just seeing scattered spot shortages of a few items. According to a lot of farmers, expect it to get a lot worse. Here's one farmer's opinion:

"Things for 2022 are interesting, and scary. Input costs for things like fertilizer, liquid nitrogen and seeds are like triple and quadruple the old prices. It will not be profitable to plant this year. Let me repeat, the economics will NOT work.... Our plan is to drop about 700 acres of corn off and convert to soybeans [because] they use less fertilizer. We are not the only ones with those plans [so] there will be a major grain shortage later in the year, especially with corn."

But again, just like inflation is beginning to take root as prophesied, food shortages should also begin to be seen. All this just means we're getting close to the Rapture.

So our big question is, "How bad will it get before the Rapture happens?" I know some Believers who are storing food and getting ready to hunker down. Hmmm...

Our Time To Shine!

Well, before you run to the mountain top to live in a radar-reflecting tent* and eat tree roots, remember that Jesus said there would be an economy in place at the time of the Rapture.

There will be buying, selling, building, planting, harvesting and social events right up until the day of the Rapture (Matt. 24:37-39; Luke 17:26-30).

This has to be referring to the Rapture, not the 2nd Coming, because before the 2nd Coming the earth is shaken so badly that all the islands sink and all the mountains on earth fall down!

*And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found. Rev. 16:20

Nothing will be normal after that! Therefore we should have an economy, food and even weddings right up until our big, loud, upward transfer.

And we should be able to discern when we are getting close because the Rapture will only come as a surprise to the unbelievers.

But you, brethren, are not in darkness, that the day would overtake you like a thief; for you are all sons of light and sons of day. We are not of night nor of darkness; so then let us not sleep as others do, but let us be alert and sober. 1Th. 5:4-6

Based on those admonitions alone, I can assure you the Lord wants us to stay put, not hide, and to be ready to share with our families, friends and neighbors the truth we know about heaven, hell and Jesus the Redeemer.

And we are to COMFORT one another while we wait.

Therefore comfort one another with these words. 1Th. 4:18

We're comforted knowing Believers are exempted from receiving God's horrible wrath that is soon to come.

For God has not destined us for wrath, but for obtaining salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, so that whether we are awake or asleep, we will live together with Him. Therefore encourage one another and build up one another, just as you also are doing. 1Th. 5:9-11

Bottom line—either we'll somehow recover from our present situation and stabilize for a while or we're right up against the exit door.

If the trumpet doesn't blow soon, we should be grateful for more chances to witness to friends and family.

praying at the same time for us as well, that God will open up to us a door for the word, so that we may speak forth the mystery of Christ... Col. 4:3

When the Lord opens a door, walk boldly through! How exciting is that! Use us, Lord!

CQLJ!
