Should America Fall, The World Economic Forum Is Prepping To Take Its Place

We are witnessing the narrative switch from COVID to global warming. True, the notion of climate change has been a leftist buzzphrase for years now, but we are seeing an increase in the rhetoric, and it is growing in vehemence.

Now, we are hearing discussion about companies' "ESG scores."

It is no secret that the goal of the United Nations and the World Economic Forum (WEF) is to instate a globalist government that encompasses the entire world. America is the sole country that stands in the way of this happening. Should America fall, the WEF will rise.

So, just what is an ESG score? It stands for "environmental, social, and governance factors," and it is a concept that has already crept throughout the United States largely unnoticed.

Why was it that international companies in the US have placed such a heavy emphasis on being "green" over the past several years?

It's because of ESG scores.

Rated on a scale of 0-100, the higher your score, the better you fare. The man with a score of 88 would be deemed more climate-conscious and a better global citizen than the man with a score of 23.

Here is how your ESG score is calculated...

A company called ESG The Report has detailed all the ways that your ESG score is calculated. Here is what they have to say:

E = Environmental Factors

There are three primary environmental factors that determine what one's 'E' score will be. They are:

What effect do you have on the environment? What are your carbon emissions like? How much waste do you create?

How effectively do you utilize natural resources? How much water do you use? How much electricity do you use?

Do you engage in any climate change initiatives?

Let us start with an analysis of the practical consequences of this.

Imagine a world where your trash output is monitored and recorded. If you create too much, those in power will know about it. Have a birthday party with family over that generates extra trash? You could end up being penalized.

Picture being told that you drink too much water, and you need to ration how much you consume. You eat too much. That's not fair to the rest of the planet. The number of calories you eat is to be dictated to you by the planners of society. Did your smart meter just detect you've met your monthly electricity allowance? Your power has just been cut off.

And what about climate change initiatives? You are literally being forced to give money to particular charities and causes at the risk of being blackballed. No money? That's okay, forced community service, so that you can prove that you planted 45 trees this past year is also an acceptable "contribution."

S = Social Factors

There are three primary "social factors" that influence one's ESG score, as well. They are:

How well do you treat your employees, local community, and society at large?
Do you support diversity?
Is your workplace safe?

Are there practical consequences to these ideas as well? You betcha.

Consider that this scoring system necessitates some form of organization to which the employees of the world can file grievances. Do you like the idea of some global organization keeping a track record of every complaint your employees make, justified or not?

How does one determine just exactly how fair you treat your local community or society at large? Would the small town gun shop owner be told that they are selling a product that is doing harm to "society at large?" Keep in mind that globalists hate American gun ownership.

What about the church that preaches that particular actions are sinful? If this goes against the globalist agenda, they could be slapped with the low ESG score label with all the consequences that follow.

Workplace safety is not something I believe people initially object to, but if there's one thing we've witnessed over the course of the past two years, it's that what is enforced upon people in the name of safety is often anything but.

Diversity is not even worth mentioning here. If you're a business that hires white, American men, your ESG score will be abysmal. You will be forced into hiring people based on their skin color rather than their ability. "Sorry, you can't work here. We haven't met our minority quota yet, and you have the wrong color skin."

G= Governance Factors

Three factors contribute to one's "G score." They are:

Do you make political contributions or influence legislation?

How much do the executives at your company make?

Are the executives within your organization diverse?

As can probably already be seen, there are a number of issues here.

For starters, consider what could happen if it's discovered you've given money to a pro-American lobbyist organization. Do you think that will help your ESG score or lower it? What if it's found you're not giving to any of the pre-approved political organizations? Could this be used to lower your ESG score as well?

Should globalists have any right to determine the pay scale of the executives in your company? Is this not a forced redistribution of wealth scheme? If I founded, run, and own the company, why can I not pay myself the salary I desire?

And of course, lastly, we see institutionalized racism incorporated by the globalist agenda once again, as they seek to force people to be hired not on their ability but on their skin color, gender, or sexual preferences instead.

Who on earth is ESG The Report?

It has to be asked who this company is. Despite their doing a very good job of hiding where they are located and who works for them, they appear to be shells for the World Economic Forum.

On their website, you'll see such questions and answers as:

"Is capitalism ethically justifiable? No, it isn't."

"Does capitalism destroy the environment? Yes, it does."

"Capitalism's alternatives include democratic socialism..."

You can also see pictures of world-class citizen, Karl Marx.

Slapping an ESG score on every human on the planet is nothing other than the next step of The Great Reset.

And no, you will not be permitted to avoid it. As Great Reset mastermind Klaus Schwab has said, "Every country, from the United States to China, must participate [in the Great Reset], and every industry, from oil and gas to tech, must be transformed."

This won't stop at the business level either. As we pointed out with the current discussion on Personal Carbon Allowances, this is being discussed at the individual level as well.

As the company, ESG The Report, says, there are a number of ways in which one can calculate their personal ESG score. Your transportation habits, your dietary habits, attitude, outlook, the environmental impact of your career choice, the way you invest, your recycling habits - all of these could be used to determine what your personal ESG score is.

Do you live a 45-minute drive out from work? Well, that hurts your ESG score. If you want to better it, you will need to move into a densely-populated urban center to cut back on your drive time.

Do you eat meat? Sorry, that hurts your ESG score.

Do you have a negative attitude towards the UN, the WEF, or ESG scores? Do you believe in national sovereignty? You love America? Sorry, an analysis of your social media posts and your recent government-mandated "outlook appointment" have all determined that these are negatives within your mindset, and your score will reflect it. You are guilty of Orwellian thoughtcrime.

As the WEF points out, an ESG score allows politicians to measure how well a business complies with The Great Reset. You're no longer measured by how profitable your business is. You're now measured by how long you're willing to comply with tyranny on a global scale.

Surely, the idea of an ESG score is just another conspiracy theory, right?

Look it up for yourself. And for those of you who refuse to believe that this will progress into anything further, may I ask how your 'two weeks to stop the spread' panned out?

The globalists' war on nations has entered its final stages: Many are ready to fall like dominoes. Tensions are escalating around the world, more rapidly it seems with each passing week.

As we pointed out back on May 26, the globalists have entered the "kill phase" of their plan for a Great Reset. But the killing is not limited to individuals in an effort to meet depopulation goals, which they are doing quite efficiently through famine, war, abortion and toxic, sterilizing injections.

The "kill phase" also targets nations.

Why?

Because God created humans (not transhumans) in His image and at the Tower of Babel He divided them into nations. Satan has been working to kill people, especially babies and children, and set up a one-world government ever since. If he can't kill them physically in an abortion he attempts to kill their souls through perverted adults like drag queens and pedophiles.

Free-thinking human beings and independent sovereign nations are the two biggest enemies of the one-world system that Satan and his minions are trying to implement.

Things are moving more quickly now, because the globalist predator class has triggered its final, end-game play for total power, using the puppet politicians they've installed in every nation of the formerly free world to do their bidding.

The globalists are pushing all the right buttons to stoke the chaos, reopening every national wound from the past, pouring salt in existing wounds. The ruling elites would only be doing this if their goal was to destabilize the nations and bring them down.

Not just a few nations. Not a single region. But worldwide, from Sri Lanka to Poland to the Netherlands, Italy, France, Canada, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, the U.K. and U.S. – it's all coming apart at the seams at the same time.

I believe the abject failures of these puppet regimes, which are starting to cause much human pain, are part of a deliberate plan.

Think about it.

They are told to go full bore on their climate agenda, driving up the cost of fuel and food to the point of making it unaffordable. Then they stoke the war in Ukraine, which exacerbates the very shortages they had already set in motion through their Covid bioweapon and supply-chain disruptions.

Without food and fuel, nations die.

But they don't die easily.

They will put up a fight.

Blood will get spilled.

A cop in the Netherlands this weekend shot at a 16-year-old boy on a tractor.

This inflames already highly charged hatred for authorities.

At some point the "have nots" will storm the fortresses of the haves and steal their stuff. More blood gets spilled in the process.

This sets the stage for a global dictatorship that will come in to restore order and promise peace and prosperity, maybe even denouncing of the whole climate change agenda that is at the heart of so much pain right now.

Before you can "build back better," according to the slogan of the World Economic Forum, you must burn everything down.

And that's where we're at right now.

Expect the fires to intensify. Many of us sense in our spirits that things are coming to a head, one way or another. The forces of good and evil are on a collision course, with all of the spiritual legions lining up behind their corresponding human agents here on Earth.

The dark angels, better known as demons, have been able to work their evil under the radar for decades while hardly being noticed. That's coming to an end. As their masks come off and they are revealed for what they are, that will lead to more people's eyes being opened and more people waking up. Many will invite Jesus into their lives as their Lord and Savior. Others will choose to side with the evil ones and just become more hardened against Jesus. They will choose the world and its system over God's kingdom.

The great push back is about to begin but we must pray for wisdom so as not to fall into the booby traps and land mines laid by the enemy.

In late May, speaking at the World Economic Forum annual meeting in Davos, Klaus Schwab told his fellow globalists that “We must prepare for an angrier world.”

Isn't it interesting how the world has gotten decidedly more angry since Schwab made that statement?

That anger is now boiling over.

We saw it this weekend in Sri Lanka when the president was forced to flee the country and protesters burned down the prime minister's residence. We see it in the Netherlands, where farmers are blocking major roadways, now joined by farmer uprisings in Italy, Poland and Spain. It seems the United States is the calmest right now but the globalist Biden administration has tried its hardest to stoke anger and division. Americans are just still too comfortable compared to those in these other nations but that's about to change.

The wealthier the country, the more time it will take to plunder and light the fuse of rebellion.

But eventually it gets lit, because owning nothing and having no privacy does not make people happy. It makes them angry.

Why is the plundering of the middle class populations being taken to such brazen levels? Because the globalists returned home from that WEF meeting in the last week of May with their orders to double down on their already outrageous climate policies, which they say are needed in order to “save the earth” from the existential threat of global warming. This involves phasing out fossil fuels, driving up inflationary pressures, putting the screws to the farmers by withholding fertilizer and diesel fuel, and also disarming the citizens worldwide.

That's why the Dutch government is forcing farmers to reduce the nitrogen in the soil by 50 to 90 percent, not only stealing their means of making a living but also drastically reducing the amount of food they can grow per acre. A manufactured food crisis is well underway and we will have food rationing in many, if not all, of the wealthier Western nations by next spring.

That's also why Justin Trudeau issued his new gun control bill, banning all handguns and limiting long guns to five rounds. In doing so, he informed Canadian citizens that they have no right to use firearms as a means of self defense.

The same “no self-defense allowed” strategy is already in place in many of the major U.S. cities that have elected prosecutors and district attorneys funded by George Soros.

We saw it in the case of the McCloskeys in St. Louis, who were charged, prosecuted and convicted for brandishing their legally purchased firearms on their own property as it was being invaded by a mob in 2020.

We saw it again just last week in New York City, when a 61-year-old deli clerk used a knife to defend himself from a vicious attack by a man who was much younger, bigger and stronger. The elderly clerk was charged with second-degree murder while the attacker's girlfriend, who helped spark the entire incident, was not charged at all. Check out the video below.

They want a disarmed populace, but if they can't disarm them, they will render their weapons impotent. Use them and you go to jail.

Less than two weeks later Biden moved on his gun control bill, which he somehow got enough Republicans in Congress to support. The bill includes a new red flag law that allows police to take away the weapons of a law-abiding citizen who has committed no crime, simply on the word of another. This is completely unconstitutional but when has that ever stopped them?

They received their orders in Davos and now they're carrying them out.

Schwab has bragged about how half of Trudeau's cabinet are his puppets, having graduated from his Young Global Leaders program. He's made similar boasts about the leaders of Sri Lanka.

Here he is bragging about "penetrating" the cabinets of most countries, naming specifically the leaders of Canada, Germany, France, Russia and Argentina.

Putin has obviously backed out of the club but the others are good little soldiers saluting their master, whether it's Schwab or Soros or some other hidden kingmaker.

Many of these puppet leaders also opened their nations' borders, allowing crime to run rampant, at the same time they are taking away guns, making it illegal to use guns for self defense, and causing runaway inflation and all kinds of shortages.

Meanwhile the U.S. government is buying up millions of rounds of ammunition through its various federal agencies like the IRS, U.S. Department of Education, Energy, Agriculture, etc.

If you have a car with no fuel, you have lost your freedom of movement.

If you have a gun without ammunition, you have lost your freedom to bear arms.

If you have a gun and ammunition but are unable to use it against a criminal attacker, you have still lost your right to self defense.

All of this is being slowly stripped away in every country.

They know that without food, fuel and weapons in the hands of middle-class civilians, the post-World War II order crumbles. People will be desperate and dependent.

Some of us won't make it, and we'll go to a better place.

For our enemy, it's all about shattering what's left of our independence and forcing us into dependency.

Dependency on them, the government and its corporate partners, for our very existence. For food, for travel, for money to pay the bills, they want us to come on bended knee to the government and its corporate partners, waving our vaccine passport in hand and showing we are obedient little serfs willing to prostrate ourselves to the "new normal," which is Satan's kingdom based on total control over all human activity.

And upon the ashes they can build the New World Order based on a new digital economy, with digital money replacing cash and a digital ID system replacing the card in your wallet.

The uprisings we see around the world are just proof to the globalists that there are too many people, too many people who still desire to live freely and just be left alone. They must be eliminated.

So they keep stoking the divisions, they keep gaslighting the masses, hoping they will get so out of line that they will be justified in calling martial law and start rounding up the resisters.

So while I greatly admire those with the courage to take to the streets, to block roadways with their tractors, to parade through capital cities with signs denouncing the globalist predators, I do not think that in every country it's wise to participate in these demonstrations. Pray for wisdom as to whether this is the best strategy in your country. In some countries there's a good chance that street demonstrations could play right into the hands of the very globalists you oppose.

The J6 folks were baited in this way.

The Canadian truckers were baited the same way.

Speaking of Canada, millions were left with no access to their money over the weekend as a massive banking outage occurred throughout much of the country, affecting close to 25 percent of the population. Could this have been a test run for a much larger cyber attack? Remember, Klaus Schwab stated last year ahead of the World Economic Forum's Cyber Polygon event, that it was a matter of when, not if, the world experiences a major cyber attack that targets the banking and financial sectors. He called it a "cyber pandemic" that will "make the Covid pandemic look like a minor disturbance."
