“Let us be alert to the season in which we are living. It is the season of the Blessed Hope, calling for us to cut our ties with the world and build ourselves on this One who will soon appear. He is our hope—a Blessed Hope enabling us to rise above our times and fix our gaze upon Him.” Tozer

Wars and Rumors Of War Spread Across The Globe

Most of us just want to live in peace, but leaders all over the world are preparing for more war. In fact, at this point it appears that the entire globe is being gripped by a really bad case of war fever.

As I write this article, the Economic Community of West African States is warning that it could invade the nation of Niger if coup leaders do not reinstate President Mohamed Bazoum. Of course the leaders of the coup do not intend to back down, and so there will probably be war. But that will be a relatively small conflict compared to others that are looming on the horizon.

On Monday, we learned that over 3,000 U.S. troops have arrived in the Red Sea...

More than 3,000 United States military personnel have arrived in the Red Sea aboard two warships, part of a beefed up response from Washington after tanker seizures by Iran, the US Navy said Monday.

The deployment adds to a growing US military buildup in tense Gulf waterways vital to the global oil trade and led Tehran on Monday to accuse the US of inflaming regional instability.

This is part of an ongoing effort by the Biden administration to bolster U.S. forces in the region, and it is hoped that a larger U.S. presence will deter Iran from taking control of any more internationally flagged ships...

Their arrival followed a U.S. announcement last month it would deploy a destroyer, F-35 and F-16 warplanes, along with the Amphibious Readiness Group/Marine Expeditionary Unit, to the Middle East to deter Iran from seizing ships in the Gulf.

The U.S. military says Iran has either seized or attempted to take control of nearly 20 internationally flagged ships in the region over the past two years and the Biden White House wants to see more forces in the region to stand ready to engage Iran if required, as Breitbart News reported.

Meanwhile, it is being reported that the city of Damascus was just "rocked by Israeli missile strikes"...

After weeks of relative quiet, the Syrian capital of Damascus was rocked by Israeli missile strikes in the early Monday morning hours, resulting in the deaths of four Syrian soldiers and several more wounded, according to state agency SANA.

The attack also caused unspecified "material damage" - while multiple inbound projectiles were reportedly intercepted by Syrian air defense. Videos which emerged in the aftermath appeared to show intercept explosions above the city in the overnight hours.

Tensions in the Middle East haven't been this high in decades, and a major war could erupt at literally any time.

But I don't think that planners in the west are anticipating a major war in the Middle East in 2023.

My personal opinion is that if a big move in the region is planned, it will be in 2024.

Meanwhile, the much-hyped "counter-offensive" in Ukraine is not going very well...

On Aug. 3-5, the Armed Forces of Ukraine (AFU) lost 2,040 additional men, bringing Ukrainian casualties to over 45,000 since the beginning of the "Counter-Offensive" June 4. The AFU has approx. 200,000 combat soldiers, 36,000 of which were trained at NATO bases like Grafenwöhr, Germany in the past months.

Writing on Russian Sputnik News, US Maj. Scott Ritter called the Ukrainian attack on heavily defended Russian lines with inexperienced troops and no air support a "massacre", with Ukrainians suffering losses at the rate of 10 to 1 compared to the Russians. Ritter called the "road to Rrobotino" east of Zaporizhzhia "a highway to hell"

Ritter is quite right. Ukrainian forces are just getting slaughtered by well prepared Russian defenses, but more young Ukrainians are being sent to their deaths with each passing day.

This "counter-offensive" was supposed to be the campaign that turned the tide of the war, but instead it is the Russians that are currently advancing...

Russia claimed its troops had advanced three kilometres (two miles) along the Kupiansk front in northeastern Ukraine.

The Russian defence ministry said that it had "improved" its standing along the front line in the last three days and continued to repel Ukrainian counter-attacks.

"Over the past three days, the advance of Russian troops... amounted to 11 kilometres along the front and more than three kilometres deep into the enemy's defence," the ministry said.

But instead of pushing for peace, the Biden administration continues to insist that we are going to pour more resources into this war "for as long as it takes", and so both sides just continue to escalate matters.

On the other side of the planet, the Chinese continue to prepare for an invasion of Taiwan.

And once the Chinese do invade, the U.S. and China will instantly be at war.

Most Americans do not seem to understand how close we really are to such a scenario. The Chinese government is absolutely obsessed with "reuniting" with Taiwan, and an eight part documentary was just released on Chinese television that is helping to mentally prepare the general public for the conflict that lies ahead...

China has released a new documentary about the army's preparation to attack Taiwan and showcasing soldiers pledging to give up their lives if needed as Beijing continues to ramp up its rhetoric against the self-ruled island.

"Chasing Dreams," an eight-part docuseries aired by state broadcaster CCTV earlier this week to mark the People Liberation Army's 96th anniversary, features military drills and testimonials by dozens of soldiers, of which several express their willingness to die in a potential attack against Taiwan.

This eight part documentary would not be on state television if the central government did not want it there.

In it, some members of the Chinese military express their intention to literally lay down their lives if that is what is necessary to take Taiwan...

"If war broke out and the conditions were too difficult to safely remove the naval mines in actual combat, we would use our own bodies to clear a safe pathway for our (landing) forces," Zuo Feng, a frogman with the PLA Navy's minesweeper unit, said in a testimonial.

Li Peng, a pilot from Wang Hai Squadron under the PLA Air Force, echoed his statement, saying his "fighter jet would be the last missile rushing towards the enemy if in a real battle, I had used up all my ammunition."

Do you think that most U.S. soldiers have that same level of devotion in this day and age?

Ultimately, the U.S. military could find itself fighting both Russia and China at the same time, and that is why an incident that just occurred off the coast of Alaska is so chilling...

Eleven military vessels from China and Russia found operating near the Aleutian Islands last week were met by four U.S. Navy destroyers, Alaska's two U.S. senators said.

The two Republican senators, Dan Sullivan and Lisa Murkowski, issued a joint news release Saturday night saying they had been briefed about the operation.

"We have been in close contact with leadership from Alaska Command for several days now and received detailed classified briefings about the foreign vessels," Murkowski said.

The Biden administration has been endlessly provoking the Russians and the Chinese, and this has just driven them into each other's arms.

Before I end this article, I should also mention the North Koreans as well, because they just threatened to "annihilate" us before the end of this century...

North Korea's Foreign Ministry this week vowed that the country would "annihilate" the United States, adding that the U.S. would be terminated this century.

"Should the U.S. choose to offend our Republic, we will annihilate them by using all our military power that we have gathered so far," the North Korean diplomats said in a statement Thursday, the 70th anniversary of the Korean War armistice.

"The Korean War in the last century marked the beginning of the downfall of the U.S. Now, the 21st century would see the irrevocable termination of the U.S. The rulers of the U.S. are well advised to forget, on no account, the lessons of history."

We are certainly living during a time of "wars and rumors of wars", and I am entirely convinced that 2024 is going to be such an important turning point.

If the American people truly understood the horrors that the coming wars will cause, there would be millions of people protesting in the streets right now.

But they don't.

Most of us just assume that our leaders know exactly what they are doing and have everything under control.

Unfortunately, the exact opposite is actually true.

We are steamrolling toward global conflict, and most global leaders do not even seem interested in talking about peace at this stage. So the unthinkable is rapidly approaching, and most people will be absolutely blindsided by the nightmarish events that are about to unfold on our planet.

The Global Fertility Industry Seeks To Erase Women From Procreation One Manufactured Egg At A Time

BY: JORDAN BOYD

As scientists ramp up their fantasies about fabricated female gametes, concerns about technology outpacing our humanity should be high.

The campaign to erase women has officially escalated to leaving them out of the sacred act of reproduction.

For years, researchers, celebrities, and OB-GYNs have touted making babies outside of the bedroom as a novelty attraction available for anyone willing to pay. Millions of test tube babies and a million more frozen embryos later, the global fertility industry has found a new way to create life without a key natural component: women.

The Economist ran a series of articles in “Technology Quarterly” this month advocating for the expansion of assisted reproductive technology to in vitro gametogenesis (IVG), an experimental procedure that involves reprogramming adult male stem cells to become usable eggs.

At least one of the stories acknowledges that outsourcing reproduction through existing technology like in vitro fertilization is “failing most women.” Already, countries, states, and healthcare facilities are grappling with how to handle ethical, moral, and legal crises like commercial surrogates with cancer and gay men who want taxpayers to fund the creation of motherless children.

As biotechnologists ramp up their fantasies about facilities filled with artificial wombs, dehumanizing “gene editing,” and now, fabricated female gametes, concerns about technology outpacing our humanity should be high.

The solution the British publication repeatedly prescribes to its readers, however — speeding up technical advancements to meet the rapidly growing desire of infertile or sexually incompatible adults to have children — falls prey to one of the biggest scams sold by the multi-billion dollar baby-making business.

The idea that humans can somehow circumvent their natural reproductive limits because of their desire to have children whenever they want is dangerous — it has led to the pain, suffering, and death of women and unborn babies.

Yet, scientists have proved over and over and over that they will continue to pursue unethical means to justify such ends.

Of Mice And Men

Enter Dr. Katsuhiko Hayashi, a Japanese researcher who, after decades of stem cell research, recently used stem cells converted from the skin on male mice tails paired with artificial ovaries to grow oocytes ready for fertilization by another male mouse.

The products of the two male mice were then placed for gestation in surrogate female mice. Of the 630 embryos manufactured with manipulated stem cell eggs and obtained sperm, more than half a dozen baby mice were born and appeared to mature without any defects.

Instead of approaching this new IVG technology with a critical eye, media outlets everywhere praised the discovery as a step towards human same-sex reproduction. In the Economist’s recent article titled “New ways of making babies are on the horizon,” the author called Hayashi’s work one of many “feats of reproductive wizardry” and pondered how long it would take researchers to make the technology mainstream.

“Henry Greely of Stanford University, a legal scholar who specialises in the ethics of new biotech, thinks IVG may within a few decades be widely used even by those who have no fertility problems,” the article suggests. “The reasoning is that, if IVG proves capable of producing viable eggs in copious amounts, it could allow the production of a large enough number of embryos to allow screening for a wide number of genetic traits, and that could be something many parents might want.”

Hayashi admits that elevating the technology beyond rodents will take time and face ethical hurdles.

“It (will be) difficult to produce babies from male-male (human) couples because of both technical and ethical reasons,” Hayashi told eager members of the press. “But it is theoretically possible to produce babies from male-male couples, as shown in this study.”

Yet, he's already begun working with Silicon Valley startups to potentially mainstream the technology for humans.

"I myself am gay and something I'm very personally interested in in terms of how it could allow people like me to be able to have biological children with their partners," Matt Krisiloff, founder of fertility research company Conception, explained in a video interview with The Economist.

Conception's website states its interest in the technology rests in the idea that it "would give women the opportunity to have children well into their forties and fifties, eliminate barriers for couples suffering from infertility, and potentially allow male-male couples to have biological children."

Other beneficiaries, The Economist says, would be "women with low ovarian reserves" and "transgender women."

Eventually, Krisiloff's company hopes to use the technology to empower the type of genetic testing that lets parents replace the inherent value of life with a numeric placeholder.

Salt In The Wound

Krisiloff's background is in artificial intelligence. He was a founding member of Open AI, the company that created ChatGPT. As I've written in previous articles, the similarities in the AI and ART industries begin with a driving desire to propel humans beyond the natural limits of our bodies and minds.

Krisiloff's expressed desire to offer parenthood to not just those who can afford it but those who deliberately choose to leave half of a procreator out of the process is a recipe for disaster. More importantly, it seeks to deliberately sideline women from something only possible because of them.

Women, especially those who are strapped for cash, already face commodification from the fertility industry through ever-popular egg "donation" and rent-a-womb contracts. If they are willing to sign on a dotted line that binds them to sacrificing their bodies, women and the babies born of their eggs or womb are forever opened to a world of pain and suffering for the sake of someone else's desires.

Creating and raising a child between two men or two women, studies show, deliberately puts the children being bought in these scenarios at a lifelong disadvantage. Kids who are born and raised by their married biological mother and father are more likely to lead healthier, safer, and better-educated lives well above the poverty line, not any other way.

Women aren't just necessary for raising healthy children, they are necessary for creating those children. No matter how hard scientists try to distance themselves from the sacred act of reproduction, humans can't permanently bypass biology without suffering moral, ethical, and physical consequences.

Extent Of De-Banking Revealed: Nearly One Million UK Accounts Shut In Past Four Years

Bank of England

POSTED BY: KURT ZINDULKA VIA BREITBART TECHNOCRACY.NEWS

Nigel Farage is taking on the global bank cartel on two counts: De-banking based on political views and forcing cash out of society. Britain is the canary in the coal mine because the Bank of England is arguably the most powerful central bank in the world. BoE is pushing its member banks to crush opposition while taking over all monetary policies.

The war between central banks and their respective governments is fully in the open. The concept of the nation-state is over, they reason, and therefore their singular clients are not clients any more. In the UK, the BoE's iron teeth have come out and the government appears to be powerless and unwilling to challenge it.- TN Editor

Big banks in the United Kingdom have shut down nearly a million accounts over the past four years, a paper revealed amid the ongoing scandal of Brexit leader Nigel Farage being debanked for his political opinions.

A report from the Mail on Sunday revealed that banks are on pace to set a record number of closures this year, with 200,000 accounts having already been closed since the start of the year, This puts the banks on pace to top the number seen last year, which stood at 343,350, a Freedom of Information request to the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA) revealed.

In total, nearly one million accounts have been closed over the past four years, alone. However, the paper noted that this figure may be underestimating the true scale of account closures, given that it only reflects accounts closed over concerns of financial crimes, and therefore would not include cases like that of Nigel Farage, who had his Coutts account shut because the bankers determined that he did “not align” with the bank’s values.

In response to the Farage revelations, Prime Minister Rishi Sunak’s government is preparing legislation to be introduced in the autumn that would mandate that banks give at least a 90-day warning to customers before their accounts are closed and provide a reason for the decision, except for instances when doing so would hinder a police investigation.

However, others have called on the government to go further, with the founder of the campaign group Fairer Finance telling the MoS: “I think the legislation should go further and limit banks to closing accounts only when there is clear evidence of criminal activity.”

There have also been suggestions that the government may require banks to pledge to protect the principle of freedom of expression or face having their licence to lend in Britain revoked.

Meanwhile, on Sunday, Mr Farage also revealed that the banking group at the heart of his debanking scandal, NatWest, is preparing to introduce new restrictions on customer’s ability to use cash.

“From September the 11th, NatWest will be limiting cash that you can deposit and cash that you can take out and they keep the absolute right to refuse cash. They even keep the right to refuse checks, basically, they want everything to be electronic,” he revealed on his YouTube channel on Sunday evening.

The attack on the ability to use cash is not only happening in the UK. In Australia, for example, banks such as ANZ and NAB recently announced that they would be banning cash withdrawals over the counter at some of their branches and that customers would need to specifically contact tellers ahead of time to schedule a physical withdrawal.

Speaking to Breitbart News Daily on SiriusXM radio last week, Mr Farage warned that with the rise of a cashless society, the West is at risk of having something akin to the Chinese social credit score being instituted through the banking system.

“What we do know is the British clearing banks are now working with some of the credit agencies to put in place word checks on the social media accounts of their customers. You can see the direction... we are literally on the verge of this happening. So we really have to start shouting,” Mr Farage said.
