

Newsbytes

December 4, 2024

No. 1177

This faithful brother influenced so many to be watchmen in these last times. God used him greatly, in His timing, to bring people a knowledge of, and love for, bible prophecy - myself included. My life was changed yet again when I read his books as a young believer. Well done sir.

The Late, Great Hal Lindsey

From the Rapture Ready Family

Two days after his 95th birthday, on Monday, November 25, the Lord called Harold Lee Lindsey home. The prolific author and beloved “grandfather” of the modern Bible Prophecy movement leaves a loving family and a gargantuan fan base—although he would encourage us by pointing to Jesus Christ rather than himself.

Born in Houston, Texas, weeks after the Stock Market Crash of 1929, Lindsey earned a Master of Theology degree from Dallas Theological Seminary, and later worked with Campus Crusade for Christ in Southern California for about a decade before authoring one of the biggest-selling books of the 20th century, The Late Great Planet Earth. Written in the immediate aftermath of the Six Day War, the book electrified the country and led to many people studying eschatology. It has sold more than 35 million copies worldwide and has been translated into 50 languages.

No one could have anticipated such a sales tsunami, but the landmark title set the stage for increased evangelism and millions of people eagerly awaiting the Rapture. Lindsey went on to host the International Intelligence Briefing and the Hal Lindsey Report for years.

After decades of pushback from mostly mainline Bible scholars, Dispensationalism made a roaring comeback in the United States, propelled most by Lindsey's influence. Scores of testimonies buttress the view that Hal Lindsey's emphasis on evangelism and a personal relationship with Jesus Christ is the real point of studying prophecy.

Lindsey's influence also extended to a flood of Christian tour groups to Israel. Interest in the Jewish state, in the light of prophecy fulfilled as the Jewish state began to repopulate the ancient homeland, swelled to unprecedented levels. As he wrote:

"The State of Israel may seem normal. But it's not. It is no more normal than the restoration of a withered hand or the parting of a vast sea. Israel is not normal. Israel is a miracle!"

"Prophecy authenticates the message," he liked to say.

Lindsey gave his personal testimony at a prophecy conference in 2013. He said that after a riverboat accident, he picked up a Bible and began to read. The book of Acts particularly caught his attention and he yearned for fellowship with believers. He was invited to a gathering at Rice University in the 1950s.

"There are turning points in every life and you are blessed if you don't miss them," he said.

After the Rice event—which, incredibly, dealt with Bible prophecy—Lindsey went back home and began studying his "copious" notes, along with his Bible.

"I stayed up all night. Being a draftsman, I drew a map and looked at the power blocs [in the international community]. I became consumed studying prophecy." He said that after work each day, he'd go home and study the Bible for up to eight hours. His eyes were then opened to the great battle between good and evil. Lindsey saw that Marxism was becoming popular at Berkeley by 1960, when he started with Campus Crusade for Christ. His passion for the remainder of his life was evangelizing the lost.

This week, he heard the sublime words, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

See you soon, brother!

This is interesting since the Beeb has never been exactly Israel friendly. You will reap what you sow – MD

BBC Journalists Quit Union After Being Told to Wear Palestinian Colors

All Israel News Staff | Published: November 29, 2024

Several journalists of the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) have resigned from the National Union of Journalists (NUJ) after the union directed its members to dress differently for a “Day of Action for Palestine.”

Jewish News reported that the NUJ “distributed directives from the Trades Union Congress (TUC),” which asked members to “wear something red, green, black or a Palestinian keffiyeh,” the traditional Middle Eastern headscarf that has become a symbol of Palestinian resistance to Israel.

The BBC journalists were also encouraged to share photos of their outfits online, to “visibly show solidarity” with the Palestinian cause.

The move caused a backlash among some of the NUJ's journalists, who have either quit or are now considering leaving the union.

“BBC journalists, who pride themselves on impartiality and who fought to keep their NUJ free of politics, are being encouraged to break the BBC’s editorial guidelines by supporting a political cause,” one BBC employee stated.

Independent journalist Charlotte Henry said she quit due to the union having become “a hostile environment for Jewish journalists.”

She added that “plenty of Jewish journalists have already quit the NUJ over its response to the war between Israel and the terror group Hamas following the atrocities of October 7, 2023.”

The NUJ responded to the backlash, stating that “clearly members working across the BBC and in public service broadcasting have important duties in relation to impartiality and work within social media guidelines the NUJ would not wish members to breach.”

Jewish News also reported the response from the Board of Deputies of British Jews, which describes itself as “the only democratically elected, cross-communal representative body in the Jewish community.”

The Board stated that this incident “represents a continued failure of unions to support workers if they are Jewish.”

“Whatever the stated intent, attempts to bring this issue into the workplace in such a fashion will undoubtedly add to the belligerent atmosphere which many Jewish staff have been facing across a variety of sectors – and highlights an ongoing issue whereby certain unions have prioritised gesture politics over the welfare of Jewish workers in their sector, resulting in an exodus of Jews from such unions,” the statement read.

The next bankers’ heist: Swap US government-owned land and minerals for Bitcoin

By Rhoda Wilson on November 29, 2024

The US government may be planning to use taxpayers’ money to buy Bitcoin and hold it on government balance sheets. Why? To benefit Bitcoin billionaires.

This move would allow the billionaires to exit their Bitcoin holdings at a high price and use the funds to acquire real assets such as land and minerals. It should be taken in the context of discussions about land and minerals owned by the US government.

Howard Lutnick, Chairman and CEO of Cantor Fitzgerald, a leading financial services firm, and Chairman and CEO of BGC Partners Inc., a global brokerage company, has been nominated to be President-elect Donald Trump’s Secretary of Commerce. Bloomberg noted on Wednesday that the knot of his conflicts of business interests when in a government position is unlikely to loosen easily. In a recent interview, Lutnick discussed how to take advantage of “$500 trillion of land and minerals owned by the US government.”

The goal, Catherine Austin Fitts says, is to swap the US government’s balance sheet from priceless assets, such as land and minerals, to worthless assets, such as Bitcoin.

“You have to give the bankers credit,” Austin Fitts says. “Who would have thought they could build a bigger heist than the pandemic this quickly?”

We are researching what looks to be the next phase in the financial coup d’état.

We are watching what appears to be a significant “astroturf” campaign to persuade the federal and state governments to begin significant Bitcoin (“BTC”) buying programmes using taxpayers’ money and funds borrowed with ever-expanding debt to fund BTC to be held on government balance sheets. This will solve a major problem faced by the Bitcoin billionaires – how to liquefy their holdings in a market that is not sufficiently broad and deep to allow them an exit during a major pump.

Why would they want to exit now? Because now that the debt growth model is over, and there is more paper than there are real assets, the rush for land and real assets is on. Think of this as a swap. If you are the Bitcoin billionaires and Mr. Global, you want to get retail to buy your digital creations so that you can shift to owning and controlling the real assets. Your problem, however, is that retail will not buy in sufficient quantity – so, you simply mandate retail buys by using the government to do it. You also want to glorify your digital creations and not draw attention to the land, minerals, gold and other real assets. The last thing you want is a wave of retail buying that competes the price of real assets higher.

It is important to connect the dots with the federal government's efforts to survey all land and mineral resources and the growing discussion of how to take advantage of "$500 trillion of land and minerals owned by the U.S. government" (See interview above with Howard Lutnick, head of NY Fed primary dealer Cantor Fitzgerald, and nominee for Secretary of Commerce). The land and minerals cannot be disappeared out the back door in the way that the black-budget technology and the missing $21 trillion were.

So, what is the best way to plunder the remaining assets? Swap them for BTC, which started off as a great idea but has been hijacked and is now operating as a pump-and-dump vehicle. If you can get government buying programmes to send the BTC price to the moon, exit your holdings, and use the funding to pick up rich land and minerals, you can swap the US balance sheet out of priceless and into worthless. And if you can arrange for the sale of BTC to be tax-free, as was trial-ballooned by one RFK at Bitcoin 2024, the economics become wildly sweet.

This is a bit like the financial equivalent of vaccine mandates. When there is little market, just have government buy it and mandate it. And kill millions.

It is hard for anyone to fathom a more outrageous "reverse Robin Hood" – take from the poor and give to the rich. However, if you look at the success of the pandemic, we are reminded that "crime that pays is crime that stays," and so the hubris continues to grow. Just start telling politicians that using taxpayers' resources (other people's money) to buy BTC will strategically position them to be "innovative" and attract the tech entrepreneurs to build the high-tech economy of the future.

Imagine an entire society of people already being brutalised by inflation and then using their retirement savings and taxes to pump the BTC price, thereby taking the Bitcoin billionaires out of their Ponzi scheme at the top.

You have to give the bankers credit. Who would have thought they could build a bigger heist than the pandemic this quickly?

In the meantime, we are collecting related elements of the chronology and video and article links here. Feel free to join in by posting your contributions in the comments below [the article on The Solari Report].

And stay tuned ... this discussion has only just begun.